Family: Harmony and Inclusivity
【Episode 2】Bravo Sis!
(Loyalty, Integrity and Righteousness of the 8 Virtues)

Mum:	Sis, why do you come home this late? And you didn't pick my call. We've all finished dinner. Eat now and then go take a shower.
Sis:	I've had a long day… A sports day banner on 3/F of my school campus has been vandalised with spray paint.
Mum:	Who would be so bold?
Discipline Mistress:	My banner! Who did this? Look at this mess! Wong Yuen Ba!
Sis:	The discipline mistress suspected that Wong Yuen Ba from the Art Club did it. She even called him in for questioning. But I didn't think it was him. He sometime gets into mischief, but never vandalism. Yet I had no proof, nor could I find out the culprit.

But guess what? While I was passing by the area near the footbridge off the market after school,
I saw another student spray-painting graffiti.

Mum: What did you do then?

Sis: Hey, what are you doing?
Stop right there!

Graffiti Boy: I know you. You're the head prefect.
Well, be smart about it, head prefect.
We're not at school, don't you stick your nose into this.

Sis: I was thinking, though we weren't at school,
the school has entrusted me with the role as a prefect,
I should therefore uphold my commitment.

You are a student of our school,
which means you should have discipline even off-campus.
Yet you are committing vandalism that impacts our community.

Then he said,
"You're so nosy, you want me to spray you too?"

Mum: What happened then? Were you hurt?

Sis: Luckily, the discipline mistress passed by and took him back to school for disciplinary action, he then confessed vandalising the sports day banner.
Wong Yuen Ba was innocent.
That's why I had to go back to school for a statement and eventually got home so late tonight.

Mum: I think you did a great job.
You upheld your responsibility and commitments,
acted with courage and refused to back down from a threat.
I am so proud of you.

Sis: Frankly, I was a bit scared at that moment.
What if he sprayed paint on my school uniform?
It wouldn't wash off.

Grandpa: If he did, I'd buy you a new school uniform.

Sis: Grandpa!

Grandpa: Sis, you upheld not only your responsibility as a prefect, but also your responsibility towards our community.
Being part of our society, we should act in the public interest.
If we extend this mindset further,
it means being loyal to society and being loyal to our country and people.

Sis: That sounds a bit too grand, Grandpa.

Grandpa: It's the little things that count.
Minor actions reveal one's true character.
I am very happy tonight.
Tomorrow is Saturday, I'll treat everyone to dim sum!

Sis: After that, shall we go buy a guitar?

Grandpa: Hmm...Alright!

Sis: Deal!

Upholding Responsibility and Acting with Courage

Dr TONG Ka-ho, Adrian: This episode vividly demonstrates the realisation of "loyalty, integrity, and righteousness" in modern society.
Witnessing her fellow student spray-painting off-campus,
Sis didn't turn a blind eye though it was none of her business.
Her upholding of responsibility as a prefect is "loyalty",
her fulfilling of commitment to school is "integrity", her fearlessness in the face of threats and her courage to protect public property undauntedly is "righteousness".

This internalised moral identity explains precisely why she holds onto her principles despite no supervision.
After Sis returned home and shared her experience,
the recognition and praises from her Mum and Grandpa were vital and helped Sis affirmed and solidified her self-image as “a responsible person who walks the talk”.
Character building requires not just preaching but deeds,
as well as feedback and recognition from our closed ones,
all in all solidify one’s value system and sense of identity.
The self-image developed within school and family can extend to finding one’s place in society and the country.
When everyone is willing to live by the virtues of “loyalty, integrity and righteousness”, interpersonal relationships and society as a whole will naturally become more harmonious and resilient.

Sis: Up next, a touching story about my younger Bro and Mum.
Stay tuned!
